 plight with Nevada's policy, which encourages the use of solar panels and wind energy for public projects.

In Arizona, a preference is given to products made in Arizona, allowing Arizona businesses to compete more effectively.

In Colorado, the state encourages the use of recycled materials, promoting sustainability and reducing waste.

In Idaho, a preference is given to products made in Idaho, supporting the state's economy and local businesses.

In Illinois, the state has a preference for products made in Illinois, which supports the local economy.

In Indiana, a preference is given to products made in Indiana, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Iowa, a preference is given to products made in Iowa, which supports the state's economy.

In Kansas, the state encourages the use of recycled materials, promoting sustainability and reducing waste.

In Kentucky, a preference is given to products made in Kentucky, which supports the local economy.

In Louisiana, a preference is given to products made in Louisiana, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Maine, a preference is given to products made in Maine, which supports the state's economy.

In Maryland, a preference is given to products made in Maryland, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Massachusetts, a preference is given to products made in Massachusetts, supporting the state's economy.

In Michigan, a preference is given to products made in Michigan, which supports the local economy.

In Minnesota, a preference is given to products made in Minnesota, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Missouri, a preference is given to products made in Missouri, which supports the state's economy.

In Mississippi, a preference is given to products made in Mississippi, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Montana, a preference is given to products made in Montana, which supports the local economy.

In Nebraska, a preference is given to products made in Nebraska, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Nevada, a preference is given to products made in Nevada, which supports the state's economy.

In New Hampshire, a preference is given to products made in New Hampshire, supporting the local economy.

In New Jersey, a preference is given to products made in New Jersey, which supports the local economy.

In New Mexico, a preference is given to products made in New Mexico, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In New York, a preference is given to products made in New York, which supports the local economy.

In North Carolina, a preference is given to products made in North Carolina, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In North Dakota, a preference is given to products made in North Dakota, which supports the local economy.

In Ohio, a preference is given to products made in Ohio, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Oklahoma, a preference is given to products made in Oklahoma, which supports the local economy.

In Oregon, a preference is given to products made in Oregon, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Pennsylvania, a preference is given to products made in Pennsylvania, supporting the state's economy.

In Rhode Island, a preference is given to products made in Rhode Island, which supports the local economy.

In South Carolina, a preference is given to products made in South Carolina, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In South Dakota, a preference is given to products made in South Dakota, which supports the local economy.

In Tennessee, a preference is given to products made in Tennessee, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Texas, a preference is given to products made in Texas, which supports the local economy.

In Utah, a preference is given to products made in Utah, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Vermont, a preference is given to products made in Vermont, which supports the local economy.

In Virginia, a preference is given to products made in Virginia, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Washington, a preference is given to products made in Washington, supporting the local economy.

In West Virginia, a preference is given to products made in West Virginia, promoting local businesses and jobs.

In Wisconsin, a preference is given to products made in Wisconsin, which supports the local economy.

In Wyoming, a preference is given to products made in Wyoming, promoting local businesses and jobs.

Key:
- Yes
- No
- “Buy American” but have “Buy Alaska” laws.
- For some automobile purchases, however, “Buy American” was ruled unconstitutional in a 1971 court case, and “Buy California” was determined to be unconstitutional by the Attorney General.
- Minority small businesses share a part of the overall preference for all small businesses.
- Steel: In Maryland, 10,000 pounds or more for public work projects. In New York, steel for public works projects only. Also aluminum in Pennsylvania. In West Virginia, over 50,000 pounds, glass and aluminum.
- Vehicles only.
- Optional for director.
- In-state vendor will be given some preference that competitor received in competitor’s home state.
- Only meat.
- Materials used in conjunction with public works contracts.
- Provides a 5% bid preference to qualified New Mexico businesses, manufacturers, and contractors.
- Steel for AOT.
- Tires, vehicle lubricants, latex paints, lead acid batteries, compost, insulation, and panel board.
- The state will purchase materials that are manufactured to the greatest extent in the United States in case of tie bids.
- State agencies must buy recycled products if practical.
- Beef.
- Paper.